Front Cover: The remains of the ore bin of the Rattler Mine, in Boomerang Gulch along the Virginia Canyon Road—better known locally as the Oh-My-God Road due to its vistas and topography—between Idaho Springs and Central City, Colorado. Located in 1879, the Rattler produced mostly silver. (Editor's photo.)

Back Cover: The Masonic Lodge and Kramer's Saloon buildings on Main Street in Nevadaville, Colorado, a mile southwest of Central City. Established at the beginning of the gold rush in 1859, the town had 2,700 residents two years later. The brick-faced, stone lodge was built in 1879, about the apex of Nevadaville's population and prosperity. Slow decline began in the 1880s, the post office closed in 1921, and the town was effectively abandoned by 1940. (Editor's photo.)
